But what really cuts ice are constraints on our actions. Singer and others emphasize that they can accept that they do not, as utilitarians, have the option to loaf about when they could help others, however much they fall short. But what is really hard about living with utilitarianism isn't self-sacrifice but other-sacrifice, paradoxically ...

I know whats wrong about huge cuts done with knives and things, and I know it doesn't solve the problem, but neither of them apply to me! I know what the problem is; I have a long term illness we are trying to get the better of, and I've only cut myself really shallow ones with a clean razor that will probably heal in about a week. I'm NOT and emo and I'm NOT doing it because it's a ...

It really doesn't matter how much money and time go into your law practice's website. You'll likely always be left wondering if it is actually doing the job you need it to do — and if not, what the heck is wrong with it. Like some, you may have overblown expectations for the work a mere website can do. Like others, you may be unwilling to fully invest what it takes to maximize a site's impact.
