Hubert Selby Jr. captured the stark realities of urban life perhaps better than any other 20th-century author. Born in Brooklyn in 1928, Selby wrote about what he knew best: the seedy underbelly of New York City. A high school dropout, he received his education in the streets and at the docks where he worked as a wayward teenager.

Hubert Selby Jr has a style all his own. Sometimes it works, sometimes it seems like art imitating art. In his most recent book WAITING PERIOD, Selby constructs a 200 page story entirely based on interior monologue. There is action except in the mind of the narrator, a character who has about as much charisma as a putrifying egg.
