Dr. Joshua Coleman: Speaker, Author & Psychologist

Here's the good news: Kids are pretty compassionate by nature. Research out of the Yale Baby Lab shows that children less than 2 years old, show greater satisfaction when giving treats to others than when receiving treats for themselves. If children are hardwired for kindness, then parents who want to raise nice kids are off to a good start. But still, parents who care about raising kids who ...

Calm Parenting—most of us aspire to it, desire it, and even promise ourselves we're going to do it—but it's so difficult to sustain. We know how important it is to parent from our principles rather than from our fears, but despite our best intentions we lose it and end up yelling at those we love the most — our kids.

Calm Parenting When Buttons Get Pushed - Empowering Parents

Discipline is one of the defining elements of parenting. Used sparingly or liberally, understanding how to discipline your child is fundamental to the parent-child dynamic. In its most basic form, discipline is about choices and consequences: You explain your expectations for your child, and if he ...
