Larry Kudlow has declared the deficit hawks (the inflationistas) the losers of the long raging inflation debate (see here for details). After almost 5 years of QE and thousands of pundits shrieking over high inflation the debate appears to have been convincingly won by the inflation doves (those who thought inflation would be low despite QE).

The claim is made here that "reverse parking is safer" but the article gives no references for this, it is merely someone's opinion. Also, if this is a study then was the study done in a shopping center car park where presumably there is a near constant churn of parking or in an office car park where there is a peak early morning parking period?
