Why is everyone else happy except from me? So i'm 16 and the reasons for me being unhappy will probably seem like pity party reasons that have been cited over, and over again by teenagers like me but whatever. Everyone that i know seem to have something going for them and they always seem to be having the time of their lives.

With Valentine's Day less than a week away, those of us who already feel lonely will likely be asking ourselves even more, "Why is everyone else in love?" When we're alone, or in a loveless relationship, it's really easy to only see happily in love couples all around us. It can seem like everyone else is in love except for us.

Excerpt from Why everyone (else) is a hypocrite. by Robert Kurzban. so, i'd like to talk about birds. Forget humans for a moment, and when i'm done you can worry a lot about whether the kind of explanation i favor doesn't apply to humans for some reason that you'll make up but is wrong.

Excerpt from "Why Everyone (Else) is a Hypocrite ...

'Everyone is' is the correct version. Although 'everyone' sounds like a lot of people, it is actually a singular pronoun, and therefore requires a singular verb. Same goes for the indefinite pronouns everybody, anybody, anyone, someone, somebody, anything, everything, no one, nothing. You could probably think of it as a collective noun.
