@recursive: At some time apt-get didn't record automatic dependencies and left them behind after an uninstall, while aptitude then introduced proper dependency tracking. In addition then it also provided some additional features not available in apt-get. I am not sure, but I think at some point apt-get and aptitude were updated to use the same, advanced backend providing much of that ...

You can also set the environment variable LESS. I use LESS=-Ri, so that I can pump colorized output from grep into it, and maintain the ANSI colour sequences.. Another little used feature of less that I found is starting it with +F as an argument (or hitting SHIFT+F while in less). This causes it to follow the file you've opened, in the same way that tail -f <file> will.
