Sherry writes: This sign was all over a parking lot in Quincy, Massachusetts. Thanks, Sherry, for turning in this typo! Of course, the correct verb is enforce, meaning to carry out. The police enforce the laws. As it turns out, inforce is not a word. But I happen to love this definition from Urban Dictionary: inforced - Word used by an ignorant person trying to say something was put in force.

Statistics are supposed to make something easier to understand but when used in a misleading fashion can trick the casual observer into believing something other than what the data shows. That is, a misuse of statistics occurs when a statistical argument asserts a falsehood. In some cases, the misuse may be accidental. In others, it is purposeful and for the gain of the perpetrator.

On Twitter, @that_angela pointed out a Calgary Herald story about wildfires that uses the prepositional phrase in affect. Here is the sentence: James Finstad with Alberta Health Services said its health advisory is still in affect. Now, before we all start guffawing into our sleeves, let's acknowledge that we understand perfectly well how this happened.

In Affect vs. In Effect: Grammar Advisory is in Effect

Learned is the more common past tense and past participle of the verb learn. Learnt is a variant especially common outside North America. In British writing, for instance, it appears about once for every three instances of learned. In the U.S. and Canada, meanwhile, learnt appears only once for approximately every 500 instances of learned, and it's generally considered colloquial.
