Why, Sam, are you in an airport in star spangled sweatpants and a neck brace, reading a coffee table book? Oh, yeah. Because you jumped off of your friend's roof, jacked your neck, got some Vicodin, and you don't care who sees you in the airport on the way back from Christmas break- which explains the giant book and horrible sweats (both Christmas gifts).

In 2015, contractors searching for mammoth fossils around the Uyandina River in Siberia found the mummified remains of two cave lion cubs. These animals are the same size as the Siberian tiger—the world's largest cat species. Cave lions roamed through Africa, Europe, and North America until they went extinct 12,000 years ago.

"We were told to start our own lines in front of places, especially in the last year. Like when the media came. The owners felt they were out to get them, so when a news crew or a reporter was there, we'd have an employee lead them to where they wanted to shoot the story ... and then have a bunch of employees out of uniform go out so that it looked like a long line."

Ancient statues are considered relics from the distant past. However, they sometimes contain other relics like scrolls, letters, money, or other items of historical importance. The finds are often surprising and coincidental because nobody would expect to find such items in the statues. But as we are about to find out, the items are often deliberately hidden inside. 10 Two Letters Were Found ...
